Getting around town

B Olive

I walk with my neighbour. We started because we wanted more exercise. It takes twenty minutes, and we notice things we miss when travelling by car. On very wet mornings, her mother gives us a lift, but that does not happen often.

C Peter

I cycle to school most days. My dad helped me find a route through quiet streets. It is longer than the main road, but I feel safer. I carry a small repair kit because I once had to push my bike home after a problem with a tyre.

A tiny repair shop

George noticed that people often threw away small things that might be repaired. He could mend a loose button, but he did not know much about other repairs. A local community centre invited him to help at a monthly repair afternoon.

His first job was welcoming visitors and writing down what they had brought. The adults did the difficult repairs. George watched them and asked questions when they were not busy. He learnt how to find a broken wire in a lamp, although he was not allowed to repair electrical items himself.

One visitor brought a wooden toy with a wheel missing. George found a spare wheel in a box and asked an adult to help attach it. The visitor had played with the toy as a child and was pleased to keep it for her grandson.

The afternoons changed how George looked at old things. He still knew that not everything could be saved. Now, though, he checked whether someone could repair an item before putting it in the rubbish. He also learnt that asking for help was part of learning a practical skill.
